Monday Text

I was given permission to help the wounded.

“Here young fellow, take his legs,” I was told.

“That’s right, gently now...” All around voices called out to me, “Water, water, please give me water.” I helped where I could – carrying soldiers to the hospital, fetching water to ease the raging thirst of the dying, comforting those beyond help. One man actually expired in my arms as I was helping him drink water. I was exhausted. My eardrums were throbbing from the noise of explosives.
